London, Ontario – November 18, 2008 – Jennifer Squires Ross, photographer and founder of Jennifer Squires Productions, has recently announced the completion of a new set of fine art photographs captured during her travels through Greece. This contemporary photography collection is comprised of scenics, details, and architecture.

While visiting the Greek Isles in September 2008, Jennifer Squires Ross was amazed by the simplicity of Greek life; “Yes they have their cell phones, but they also live in modest dwellings linked by a maze of walking paths. We could learn a lot from them”.

Gas guzzling SUVs and luxury vehicles are almost non-existent; instead locals rely on scooters, subcompact cars, and a bus system that provides transport between communities. Solar hot water heaters are a common site on rooftops. “I would love to see that become the norm here”, Jennifer says. “We could use them to pre-heat our water before being run through conventional hot water heating systems”.

Santorini, Naxos, and Paros are the subjects of Jennifer’s newest collection of fine art photographs. “Naxos was definitely my favourite. A beautiful mix of small dense towns and vast expanses of hills, valleys, and groves make this island a great place to unwind”.

Some of Jennifer’s more notable photographs in this collection are two impressionistic pieces; “Farther Than the Eye Can See”, blurring the lines between where the earth ends and the sky begins; and “Greece #250”, illustrating the unique way that the towns on the island of Santorini cling to the edge of the caldera. The gritty black and white photograph “Weathered”, and the simplicity of “Greece #217” bring to mind a simpler time by highlighting the architecture that is typical of the Greek Isles.

These fine art photographs will compliment dining rooms, living areas, bedrooms, and offices, and can be produced as large as 24x30 inches or as small as 4x6 inches.
